PDF transcripts with digital signatures Software program offers security to court reporters

Houston, TX, February 7, 2008 - Software design company Reporting Solutions, Inc. (RSI), developer of pdf-it, announces the release of *pdf-it Reporter Edition*TM that offers court reporters the ability to digitally sign transcripts within a single PDF transcript package. The new edition will offer independent court reporters the same security and benefits that were once offered only to reporting firms.

pdf-it enables the legal community to work with only one file format for both the transcript and exhibit(s) sections of a deposition. PDF transcripts offer condensed printing, multiple search options, electronic distribution and storage. pdf-it was initially available only to reporting firms.

*pdf-it Reporter Edition*TM, allows court reporters to convert ASCII files into formatted, digitally signed PDF transcripts. A digital signature allows the reporter to electronically certify a transcript, preventing file tampering while considering the policies or stated opinions of state Court Reporting Boards regarding digital signatures.

pdf-it and *pdf-it Reporter Edition*TM are available through both monthly subscription and per use pricing. The applications can be used from any internet connection offering access 24 hours a day. RSI is currently offering a complementary 60 day trial period.

Reporting Solutions, Inc. founder Morgan Babin has worked in programming, research and development for over 12 years, including hands on experience in the reporting industry.
